Harry S. Truman – Home in Independence

Director: Sound 32.

Harry Truman: Well it's good to be back home in what I call the center of the world: Independence, Missouri. I think it's the greatest town in the United States, and I've been all over the country, and I've been to Europe and South America and several other places, but I still like to come back home, and I'll continue to feel that way as long as I live. And I think you'll find everybody in Independence feels the same way about this town because it's the center of things for most of us, and it's the center of things for me, and I'm more than happy to be here and to stay here for the rest of my life. I hope I won't cause you too much trouble while I'm here.
