Transcriptions Reveal Life in the Trenches

As part of our World War I commemoration, we recently invited you to help transcribe "Tales from the Trenches": written accounts of World War I soldiers and their first experiences in battles. This series contains remarkable and moving accounts of war through unit histories, station lists, operations reports, messages, and more.

Brumbelow, James L. Pvt. 132nd M.G. Bn. Co. C 36th Division 1918, 236.33.61.

National Archives Identifier 77416662

You answered the call! Of the 2,409 records in the series, 6,652 pages were transcribed by our citizen volunteers. We were especially moved by the descriptions of the battlefield by the soldiers who experienced the war first hand, and wanted to find a way to capture their experiences.

Now that the transcriptions are nearly complete, we are excited to share how your work transcribing has unlocked the stories within these records, and ensured these soldier's voices are heard.

By performing a "search within" these records in the Catalog, we can now search for events, battlefield conditions, or even emotions that soldiers wrote about within their accounts. For example:

The word "artillery" can be found in 523 records in this series:

"About 4 PM we moved forward to canal under heavy artillery and machine gun fire. Were relieved next morning."

National Archives Identifier 77424758. Transcribed by Citizen Archivist Ndlund

The word "afraid" can be found in 23 records in this series:

car but I fought my way -
through it with only one man left. I kept firing all time there was only a squad in the Co. to cover 500 meters -
but we was strong and brave men when we reached our objective we had captured
at least a Battalion of the Boer I was afraid that we would never reach our objective with one man
but we only had 4 killed and two wounded all it takes is nerve

"I was afraid that we would never reach our objective with one man alive but we only had 4 killed and two wounded all it takes is nerve"

Notes from Japan Regarding the Treaty of Yedo, 1860 - 1862

This series consists of original Japanese notes received from the Japanese Shogunate, foreign ministers, and the first Japanese Embassy in the United States regarding the Treaty of Yedo, courtesies extended to the Japanese Mission, and Minister to Japan Townsend Harris. Included are letters to President James Buchanan from the Tycoon of Japan, and an album of autographs of members of the mission. English and Dutch translations of some documents are filed with the notes; other translations are filed as enclosures to despatches from Townsend Harris. Many documents are in Chinese.
