

Beginning Genealogy: How Do I Get Started?

Date: 02/10/10

Time: Workshop 9:30—12:00
Hands-on Research: 1:00+

Location: National Archives at Atlanta

There is no charge
for this workshop.

Note: Please bring as much information as you have about your family. Start with yourself, parents, and grandparents. Ask your relatives about your family history. Look in family records such as scrapbooks, baptism records, family Bibles, and bring copies of birth certificates, obituaries, marriage certificates, etc.

Federal records in the National Archives are a treasure chest of genealogical information, and there's a good chance you or one of your family is represented among our holdings. Each year, millions of people use records in the National Archives to search for their family roots. Census schedules, ship passenger arrival lists, citizenship papers, military pension files, land patents, and court records offer detailed evidence to flesh out family histories.

In-depth family history research is time consuming. But with patience, you might unearth a wealth of documentation.

We invite you to attend the workshop and learn how to discover your family's history!
