Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs): Guidance on the impact of the Coronavirus

These FAQs were prepared to address concerns contractors doing business with the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) may have related to the impact of the Coronavirus (COVID-19). The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) continues to remind the nation that the risk to the average American remains low. Health and government officials are monitoring the spread of the Coronavirus around the globe, including in the United States. With that noted, the CDC offers the most up-to-date information on COVID-19. Companies are encouraged to examine their preparedness for maintaining their ability to perform on NARA contracts.

The below FAQs are based on what is currently known. NARA’s Office of the Chief Acquisition Officer will provide updates to these FAQs as more information becomes available.

1. What is the Coronavirus and where can I find more information on the Coronavirus disease?

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control & Prevention (CDC) maintains that the risk to the average American remains low. Visit the CDC’s website for additional guidance at www.cdc.gov.

2. What if I am unable to fulfill the contract awarded to me because of the Coronavirus?

Your first obligation as a prime contractor on a Federal government contract is to complete performance on that contract. If you do not perform at a satisfactory level, the Contracting Officer may terminate your firm for non-performance. Should your firm be terminated – for convenience or default – it is possible you may not receive another Federal contract due to documented poor past performance.

For any potential performance interruptions, contractors should review their contracts to see what, if any, latitude or remedy for performance delays are available. While most commercial contracts have a force majeure clause that excuses performance under extreme circumstances, including pandemics, government contracts do not typically utilize this kind of commercial language. Instead, contracts usually contain Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) and other agency-specific regulations. Here, some cost-reimbursement, time-and-material, and labor-hour government contracts contain FAR Clause 52.249-14 – Excusable Delays. This FAR clause, if inserted into the contract, provides that the Contractor shall not be in default because of any failure to perform if the failure arises from causes beyond the control and without the fault or negligence of the contractor.

Notably, NARA still reserves the right to terminate the contract for convenience if there is a delay in contractual deliverables to the government subject to the clause above. Further, all Federal government commercial contracts should contain FAR Clause 52.212-4(f), which provides that the contractor shall be liable for default unless nonperformance is caused by an occurrence beyond the reasonable control of the contractor and without its fault or negligence such as acts of God or the public enemy, acts of the government in either its sovereign or contractual capacity, fires, floods, epidemics, quarantine restrictions, strikes, freight embargoes, and unusually severe weather and delays of common carriers.

The contractor shall notify the Contracting Officer, or in the case of a subcontractor – the Prime’s Contracting Officer, in writing, as soon as it is reasonably possible after the commencement of any excusable delay. Providing official notification will set forth the full particulars in connection therewith, shall remedy such occurrence with all reasonable dispatch, and shall promptly give written notice to the Contracting Officer of the cessation of such occurrence.

Contractors should take note that this clause requires contractors to notify the Contracting Officer in writing “as soon as it is reasonably possible” and mitigate any potential impact.

With or without this clause, contractors would be wise to be in frequent communication with their government counterparts to set expectations and develop a plan.

3. What happens if the NARA facility or NARA personnel are unavailable, making it difficult or impossible to perform on a NARA contract?

Contractors should communicate in advance with the Contracting Officer and determine the impact if it is possible that government employees will not be at their worksites and not be able to manage a contract properly. It is best to complete tasks that may be done without government guidance and continue to attempt to reach the point of contact on the contract, via email, either the Contracting Officer’s Representative (COR) or the Contracting Officer (CO). Contractors should not make significant changes to schedule, scope, deliverable, or cost without formal approval to do so.

Note: Contractors may also be entitled to wind down and startup costs if performance is not possible due to the government’s unavailability.

4. What if I’m a subcontractor on a NARA contract? How are subcontracts impacted?

Contracts between a Prime contractor and its subcontractor(s) are considered commercial contracts. Subcontractors are encouraged to review agreements with their Prime Contractor representative to fully understand their obligations and recourse options in the event of impact to performance due to the Coronavirus. As noted above, many commercial contracts contain a force majeure clause that provides for excusable delay for things like epidemics, quarantine restrictions, etc. However, it is important to know that these agreements often allow prime contractors to seek goods and services from other sources if a subcontractor cannot fulfill its obligations for an excused reason.

As noted above, these FAQs are based on what is currently known. NARA’s Office of the Chief Acquisition Officer will provide updates to these FAQs as more information becomes available.
