

To discover and register for currently available, scheduled webinars go to <https://www.archives.gov/education/distance-learning/professional-development.html>.

To request a program for your local teachers, students, service district or library, contact distancelearning@nara.gov. Use Southeastern Native Classroom in the subject line.

Learn to find and work with historic and modern documents, photographs, videos, and sound recordings focused on Southeastern Native People and communities.

Learn to use the National Archives' award-winning online program, DocsTeach, to create engaging online educational materials tailored to your classroom and community that honor Native Traditions, Values, and Practices.

DISTANCE LEARNING WEBSITE

<https://www.archives.gov/education/distance-learning>

Email

distancelearning@nara.gov

CITIZEN ARCHIVIST PROGRAM

<https://www.archives.gov/citizen-archivist>

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

EDUCATION

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

EDUCATION

NATIVE PEOPLE OF THE SOUTHEASTERN U.S.

NEW

ONLINE EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS
AND RESOURCES

Discover Southeastern Native Records for Yourself and Future Generations

DISTANCE LEARNING

<https://www.archives.gov/education/distance-learning>

email: distancelearning@nara.gov

CITIZEN ARCHIVIST PROGRAM

<https://www.archives.gov/citizen-archivist>

Background

For more than 80 years, the National Archives has been preserving and protecting the permanent records of the Federal Government and its agencies. Today, we hold over 20 billion records, recording locations, events, and people in the United States from the mid 1700s to today, including Native People in the states of Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, West Virginia and Virginia.

Various intensive scanning projects are rapidly placing more and more of these valuable materials into our Online Catalog for use by historians, school children, teachers, university students, librarians, legal teams, and more. But the more documents there are, the more difficult they sometimes are to find. This is where our Citizen Archivist program comes in.

Educational Opportunities

One-hour online programs assist teachers, librarians, historical societies, and other interested groups to use National Archives' primary sources in their work. These programs are available both as regularly scheduled webinars and programs by request.

Samples of Available Programs

- How Many Trails of Tears?
- Bringing Native Voices into the Non-Native Classroom
- Primarily Teaching - Online Version (Focus on Native America)
- A Native American Perspective of the Lewis and Clark Trail
- Indian Schools in the United States

Southeastern Native Citizen Archivist Program

Our new program enables teachers, students, and other interested groups to participate directly in tagging, transcribing, and explaining Southeastern Native records in the Online Catalog. For more information and training, contact distancelearning@nara.gov. Use Southeastern Citizen Archivist in the subject line.

If you're going to do any meaningful work, you have to get out of the public eye and spend serious time in libraries. That's where the important things happen."

—Vine Deloria,
Hunkpapa Lakota