I also noticed there was a NYT article mentioning NARA OIG. (Summary from a news service below)

NARA DISCOVERED POTENTIAL CLASSIFIED MATERIAL RETURNED BY TRUMP. The New York Times (2/9, Epstein, 20.6M) reports that NARA discovered "what it believed was classified information in documents Donald J. Trump had taken with him from the White House as he left office, according to a person briefed on the matter." The discovery, which occurred "after Mr. Trump returned 15 boxes of documents to the government last month, prompted the National Archives to reach out to the Justice Department for guidance, the person said." The department "told the National Archives to have its inspector general examine the matter, the person said." It is unclear what "the inspector general has done since then, in particular, whether the inspector general has referred the matter to the Justice Department."

To clarify, the issue of the torn up records (which occurred while Trump was in office) is separate and distinct from the issue of the 15 (not 12) boxes that Trump removed when he left office and returned to us last month. The press is reporting on both of them, so it's easy to get confused. (b) (5), (b) (7)(A)

Good morning,

Please see these questions from Washington Post reporter Jackie Alemany and let me know how to respond. Her deadline is 2 p.m. today.

(b) (5)

Here are the Post questions:

- Two Trump advisers said the Archives recently visited former president Trump's home in Florida at the end of last year to retrieve boxes of documents and items that were not properly turned over to the agency. Does the Archives have any comment on how these missing items were identified and tracked down?
- The advisers referred to "several" boxes -- how many boxes were retrieved?
- Are there any documents that were recovered that are relevant to the House select committee's investigation into January 6?
- How did the Archives discover that the materials were missing?

- Are there additional missing documents that were not retrieved from the former president?
- The Trump advisers say that the boxes contained letters from world leaders, mementos, gifts and other correspondences -- and nothing nefarious. Does the Archives agree with that assessment? How would the archives characterize the contents of the boxes tracked down in Mar-a-Lago?
- Does it appear that the former president was improperly hiding material or engaged in unlawful behavior in keeping the documents?
- Has the archives ever had to track down materials from another president like it did with President Trump? If so, who, and what
- We understand that some ripped documents were discovered during the Trump era in classified burn bags and that White House records staff had to remove them and often tape fragments together. Can you please comment on this?

Thank you for your assistance,

Thanks so much for getting in touch and for your help earlier this week.

We have some time-sensitive reporting regarding the Trump White House's handling of presidential records that I've outlined below.

Please let me know if the Archives might be able to provide any responses or comments to our questions. Our deadline is a bit tighter than usual so we'd appreciate a response by 2p today.

Let me know if it's easier for you to hop on the phone to discuss.

Thanks again for your time and help.

Good morning,

Please see these questions from Washington Post reporter Jackie Alemany and let me know how to respond. Her deadline is 2 p.m. today.

(b) (5)

Here are the Post questions:

- Two Trump advisers said the Archives recently visited former president Trump's home in Florida at the end of last year to retrieve boxes of documents and items that were not properly turned over to the agency. Does the Archives have any comment on how these missing items were identified and tracked down?

- The advisers referred to "several" boxes -- how many boxes were retrieved?
- Are there any documents that were recovered that are relevant to the House select committee's investigation into January 6?
- How did the Archives discover that the materials were missing?
- Are there additional missing documents that were not retrieved from the former president?
- The Trump advisers say that the boxes contained letters from world leaders, mementos, gifts and other correspondences -- and nothing nefarious. Does the Archives agree with that assessment? How would the archives characterize the contents of the boxes tracked down in Mar-a-Lago?
- Does it appear that the former president was improperly hiding material or engaged in unlawful behavior in keeping the documents?
- Has the archives ever had to track down materials from another president like it did with President Trump? If so, who, and what
- We understand that some ripped documents were discovered during the Trump era in classified burn bags and that White House records staff had to remove them and often tape fragments together. Can you please comment on this?

Thank you for your assistance,

Thanks so much for getting in touch and for your help earlier this week.

We have some time-sensitive reporting regarding the Trump White House's handling of presidential records that I've outlined below.

Please let me know if the Archives might be able to provide any responses or comments to our questions. Our deadline is a bit tighter than usual so we'd appreciate a response by 2p today.

Let me know if it's easier for you to hop on the phone to discuss.

Thanks again for your time and help.

Thanks, Jason.

I also noticed there was a NYT article mentioning NARA OIG. (Summary from a news service below)

NARA DISCOVERED POTENTIAL CLASSIFIED MATERIAL RETURNED BY TRUMP. The New York Times (2/9, Epstein, 20.6M) reports that NARA discovered "what it believed was classified information in documents Donald J. Trump had taken with him from the White House as he left office, according to a person briefed on the matter." The discovery, which occurred "after Mr. Trump returned 15 boxes of documents to the government last month, prompted the National Archives to reach out to the Justice Department for guidance, the person said." The department "told the National Archives to have its inspector general examine the matter, the person said." It is unclear what "the inspector general has done since then, in particular, whether the inspector general has referred the matter to the Justice Department."
