Highlights from the National Archives Catalog

Normally our staff archivists feature interesting or unique materials from the archival stacks for a section titled Hidden Treasures from the Stacks. Given the pandemic, onsite access to records for the public and staff has been suspended as National Archives facilities are not open. However, we are constantly working to add new materials and records to the catalog. The following is a sample of some treasures from our holdings.

National Park Service Historic Register Nominations - These records were recently added to the National Archives Catalog and feature the National Historic Register Nominations and the National Historic Landmarks from across the country - specifically over 90,000 Historic Register locations and 2,600 Historic Landmarks. All 50 states have materials included in the collection. Each nomination gives not only a physical description/detail of the site but also the historical significance of why it was being granted historic status. Most of the nominations also include photographic materials of the location. In some cases, the nomination materials also include correspondence in support of the nomination whether it be from local residents or elected officials.

Of the thousands of nominations, some examples include: Chilkoot Trail (Skagway, AK); Manzanar War Relocation Center (Independence, CA); Pearl Harbor, U.S. Naval Base (Honolulu, HI); Marshal Field Company Store (Chicago, IL); childhood home of Malcolm X (Omaha, NE); and Eastern State Penitentiary (Philadelphia, PA). More information on how to search the National Archives Catalog for these records can be found at the National Register of Historic Places and the National Historic Landmarks Program website. Right and Below: This is the Livestock Exchange Building located at 1600 Genessee in Kansas City. It was built from 1909-1911 and served as the central headquarters for the Kansas City stockyards. The building was designed by the architectural firm of Wilder and Wright and built by Swenson Construction. The building was used heavily from 1911-1951 as the stockyards sold millions of cattle, hogs, sheep, horses and other livestock. By the 1980s the buying/selling process had changed drastically and in 1991 the last auction was held at the stockyards. The building underwent a massive renovation in the early 1990s. Today it houses a variety of small businesses, artist studios, and services. The Livestock Exchange building was granted national historic status in 1984.

Patent and Trademark Office Records - The U.S. Patent and Trademark Office has regulated the patent process since 1836. Found within the holdings of the National Archives are multiple series of records related to patents including Patent Case Files, 1836-1978; Design Patent Case Files, 1853-1978; Plant Patent Case Files, 1930-1978; and Reissue Patent Case Files, 1860-1979. In addition, other types of patent records exist that deal with things like abandoned applications, defensive publications, terminated reexamination files, and interference files (disputes over patents). These patents tell all sorts of stories in terms of why the inventor created the item as the file usually includes not only a description/drawing of the item being patented, but also the inventor's explanation (oath of invention) of what makes the item different or unique and worthy of being granted patent approval.

Plant patents have a criterion in that the patent for the plant must be unique and capable of reproduction without the aid of fertilized seeds, resulting in a true genetic copy. These records also usually include colorful drawings of the plant, and in some cases it is a fruit being patented that comes from a plant.

Various examples of patent files include inventions for a Coffee Urn; Spoons; Staple Machine; Muzzle for Pigs; Flying Machine; Grand Piano; Car-Brakes; Toy House; Corpse-Cooler; and a Tattooing-Machine. Examples from the plant patents include inventions for Plum; Mangoes; Carnation Plant; Poppy; Grape; Freesia; and Poinsettia Plant.

For those who find patents fascinating and want to express their own artistic talent, the National Archives Color Our Collections series includes a Coloring Book of Patents found here. More patent files and images are available for research and discovery in the National Archives Catalog.
