Surprising Details about the Legislative Branch

- Congress is political. It is concerned about its reputation. It writes its own rules.

- No central authority is in charge; there is no central rulemaking authority.

- Independence is the hallmark of each personal, committee, or leadership office.

- Much of Congress’s work that is proactively disclosed is “pre-decisional” and “deliberative.”

- Many laws do not apply to Congress.
How Legislative Branch Disclosure Happens

- Federal law (statutory)
- Concurrent resolution (non-statutory)
- Chamber rules (House rules and/or Senate rules) — includes precedent
- Committee rules (or practices or resolutions)
- Appropriations report language
- Caucus and Conference Rules
- Traditional practices/ voluntary practices (emergent)
- Legislative Branch agency regulations & guidance

<tr>
<td>Mandatory Proactive</td>
<td>Bill text, summaries, &amp; status information; committee reports; enacted laws; lobbying disclosure; spending; Congressional Record; floor &amp; committee schedules; video of (some) proceedings</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Voluntary Proactive</td>
<td>Press releases &amp; statements; unintroduced draft bill text; personal office website info (services, etc.); letters; some “internal” reports</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mandatory Responsive</td>
<td>FOIA to older records at the National Archives; FOIAs to the Copyright Office</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Voluntary Responsive</td>
<td>Press conferences; pen &amp; pad briefings; unintroduced draft bill text; member schedules; responses to letters + tweets; some scheduling; questions for the record</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quasi-Mandatory Responsive</td>
<td>GAO &amp; Library of Congress’s FOIA-like processes; Capitol Police statistical summary of complaints against USCP employees</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Involuntary Disclosure</td>
<td>Disclosure by third parties; press coverage; FOIA to Executive agencies for legislative communications; paid services</td>
</tr>

How to Think About Enhancing Legislative Branch Transparency

- The further an entity is away from playing a deliberative role the more similar it becomes to an Executive branch agency, and thus traditional Executive branch remedies (like FOIA) may become more appropriate.
- Bright lines are best. Proactive disclosure is better than responsive disclosure.
- If you can buy the info from a 3rd party, the Legislative branch should proactively disclose it instead.
- If it is already disclosed in some format, it should be disclosed as data.
- Consider Executive branch best practices for the Legislative branch.
- Archiving & access to archived records are inconsistent.
- Classified info (esp. derivative) is a whole other world.
Some Recommendations for Legislative Branch Transparency

Easier

- Proactively release Legislative branch IG reports (e.g., on Oversight.gov)
- Historical CRS report online + current reports as data
- Congressional serial set & enacted laws online and as data

Intermediate

- FOIA-like process for various Leg branch support agencies
- Witness demographics and disclosure of conflicts-of-interest as data
- Historians/Archivists to support committees + NARA disclosure afterward

Harder

- Legislative branch declassification office
- Centralized reports & letters from/to Congress
- Leg branch-wide transparency & data coordination office
- Contextualizing legislative activities (e.g. approps language, bill comparisons)

Open the Judicial Branch

Freedom of Information Act Advisory Committee to the Archivist

March 3, 2021

Michael Lissner
Executive Director
Free Law Project
What’s in the Judicial Branch?

- ~200 courts: district, bankruptcy, appellate, special
- Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts
- Judicial Conference of the U.S.
- Federal Judicial Center (FJC)
- 81 Federal Public Defender Organizations
- U.S. Sentencing Commission
- Supreme Court Police
The Status Quo

- Secretive culture; difficult to get anything beyond court docs

- Common Law right of access
  - Frequent use for court records
  - Little (visible) use on administrative records

- Common Law’s two tenets:
  - Is it a public document?
  - Is the public’s need greater than the gov’t privacy?
Recent Events

- Solar Winds hack
- Thomas, Kozinski, and Kavanaugh sexual harassment allegations
- PACER fee skimming
Problematic Judges

- Dozens of judicial impeachments:
  - 1804, 1805, 1806, 1873 (2×), 1874 (2×), 1879 (2×),
    1912 (2×), 1914, 1915, 1924, 1929, 1936, 1939
    2018

- Not impeached:
  - J. Hugo Black was Klansman
  - J. McReynolds was anti-semitic, sexist, and racist
What Could We Get — Top Ten (1/2)

1. Disciplinary actions and complaints for judges and attorneys, whistleblower reports, disbarment proceedings, admission records
2. Financial records and contracts
3. Fines and fees levied
4. AO court guidance letters
5. Security audits, recovery plans, and incident reports
What Could We Get — Top Ten (2/2)

6. SCOTUS public calendar

7. Judicial Conference committee membership and minutes

8. List of all judges past and present

9. FJC Integrated DB but with judge information

10. The next top ten list
Include / Exclude?

- Sealed documents?
- Court documents (e.g. trial exhibits)?
- Judicial papers?
- Clerk selection criteria?
- Retirement letters to the president?
- FISA courts?
Problems to Overcome

- How do you appeal rejected requests?
- How close to judicial proceedings and papers do you go?
- Will judges sour on FOIA oversight?
- Huge requests: “I want all filings, please.”
Thank You
