	The Forest Service responsibility for the management of National Forest System lands includes important surface management responsibilities related to mineral resources. Records with 2800, 2810, 2820, and 2830 file designations involve minerals administration, development of mineral regulations and policy, processing of various patent applications, lease applications, requests for permits to drill or mine, and direction to lower level offices. Items that have legal significance must be retained for reference until issues, sometimes dormant, are resolved or until they are voided by a statute of limitations. Some items may have long-term, near historic, significance because of important policy implications related to mineral resource issues. Case files have potential long-term value because they relate to mineral rights or other property rights. File designation 2800 was added to the Forest Service Manual, January, 1981. Records material filed under 2880 includes material pertaining to policies, evaluations decisions, and direction regarding geologic factors and facilities. Retention periods should be consistent with the duration or life of the policy, program, or facility involved.
