	Advanced Technology Assessments Files These assessments are used to provide threat support to the US Army's force, combat and materiel development processes and document one of AMC's core missions to provide technology, acquisition and logistics to sustain Army's materiel readiness. Threat assessments provide a summary of current and projected threat, targets, and missions of the proposed systems emphasizing the interactive effects of the system and threat. These records are a collection of AMC assessments of advanced technology maintained on the ATARS database by a contractor who creates a new CD annually for the government. The US Army research labs provide information on selected topics to the contractor who adds to it information from public sources, then writes an assessment, and sends it back to the appropriate research lab for approval. After approval it is added to the rest of the collection on the CD at the annual update. Each time the CD is updated, it supersedes the previous edition. All the paper documents pertaining to each ATAR topic are converted to electronic form and incorporated into a final ATAR for that topic and added as an electronic report on the CD. Currently the assessments fit on one CD; however, it is expected to go to a two-volume set sometime near FY04 based on the current rate of ATAR production. Dissemination of the assessments are made annually via the CD. The CD is a stand-alone - it can be read by anyone receiving a copy. Source documents are scheduled under 25-1kkk. The proposed disposition instructions apply to all media and format.
