	in two places: the storage site, and the master Data Card Repository (Rock Island, IL). The custodian of the master repository has no mechanism available to tell when a lot has been expended, as that lot is sent to the field and may exist for many years before being exhausted or condemned/destroyed. Malfunction investigations at any time may require production of the master data card, and there is no statute of limitations on the conduct of such investigations. The US Army Armament Materiel Readiness Command (ARRCOM) at Rock Island requires long-term retention of these records for mission accomplishment, such as facilitating malfunction investigations, performing suspension and restriction actions, conducting reliability studies, developing test programs, facilitating criminal investigations, legal proceedings, etc. Requests for an average of 1,500 data cards are received and filled by ARRCOM each month.
