1.	RECORDS OF THE NAVAL INTELLIGENCE COMMAND and the NAVAL INVESTIGATIVE SERVICE Individual Case Investigation (History) Files: non-derogatory personnel security investigations relating to individual Department of the Navy personnel, applicants for positions, and some non-DOD personnel, accumulated prior to 1948 by the Naval Intelligence Command and the Naval Investigative Service (formerly the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations). The records presently are stored at the Washington National Records Center under accession number 9000, as a part of Record Group 28. They contain copies of National Agency Checks, transmittal letters, personal history statements, local agency checks, cross reference sheets to other documentation (which by now should have been destroyed), miscellaneous documents with insufficient data to identify the individual (such as for a John SMITH), copies of other agency background investigations, World War II newspaper clippings, requests for change of Navy designator (such as from 1105 to 1635), and other related miscellaneous documents. Destroy immediately. Last year, fewer than 500 attempts were made to research these files, estimated to comprise 156,000 individual cases. Those searches that were successful Copy to Agency Field 4/22/75 provided little meaningful information. Many of the files contain only a single, or two or three, documents, and the value of many of these even for initial filing today appears questionable.

2 Related index records, held by the Navy Investigative Service. Destroy immediately.
