10/10/75 Copy to Agency 11-5-75 Changes made with approval of Lorna Anderson

Duplicate diazo(positive) copies of microfiche jackets, provided individual action offices, to meet temporary reference needs.

Destroy when two years old, or when immediate reference needs have been met.

The microfiche jacket file system for the above subject file provides for filming all pages of incoming and outgoing OPNAV records having continuing research or reference value, as a retained record of how the office performs its mission.

Briefly, the system provides for review of incoming mail upon receipt, identification of action and reference value correspondence and other documents, and preparation of an Incoming Mail Record (IMR). Preparation of the IMR automatically inputs access data into the computer for future query. (A mini-computer is used for this purpose.) Incoming documents and the mail record then are microfilmed for general subject filing, using the Navy's standard subject identification codes. Other appropriate cross reference entries, for query purposes, are made as necessary.

After filming, the incoming document and IMR are sent to the cognizant OPNAV office for action. Upon return to the central mailroom, the IMR is again filmed, along with the outgoing and any needed supporting documents, to pick up any added routings or information. The film record is then filed in the dummy microfiche jacket, already prepared for this purpose, at the reference point.

Hard copies of current documents now are being returned to the OPNAV action office. After retention for a short period, to meet immediate office reference needs, they will be destroyed.

Also to be filmed immediately is the two-year file accumulation (1973 and 1974) of hard-copy (paper) records, now held on board in the file room. The original paper records will be destroyed as soon as they are filmed and the film verified.

4. magnetic tape index
Permanent. Transfer master negative and a positive copy to the National Archives when five years old.

The Department of the Navy certifies that the permanent microfilm will be prepared in accordance with 41 CFR 101-11.504.
