	U.S. Displaced Persons Commission (DPC) Declassified Files The Office of Special Investigations (OSI) was created in 1979 in the criminal Division of the Department of Justice to investigate and civilly prosecute participants in World War II-era acts of Nazi-sponsored persecution. When the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act (IRTPA) was enacted in 2004, OSI's duties expanded. The unit gained responsibility for investigating and bringing legal actions in federal court to revoke the United States citizenship of any naturalized U.S. citizen who committed, ordered, incited, assisted, or otherwise participated abroad in genocide, or, under color of foreign law, torture or extrajudicial killing. In that work, OSI was part of an interagency federal effort to identify suspected perpetrators of human rights violations who have entered the United States and to prosecute them in the United States under applicable laws and/or remove (deport) or extradite them to countries or international tribunals that can try them for their crimes. Within the multi-agency effort, OSI was responsible for identifying human rights violators who have obtained U. S. citizenship and for taking legal action, through civil or criminal charges, to revoke that citizenship so they can face appropriate measures to hold them accountable. In March 2011, OSI was merged with the Criminal Division's Domestic Security Section (DSS) to form a new section, the Human Rights and Special Prosecutions Section (HRSP).
