Background:

Combined Federal State (COMB FED-STATE) application software receives Form 1099 files from Information Return Processing (IRP), and from these files identifies which states are to receive the file. The software then reformats the files into individual state files and sends the file to the specific state.

IRP sends an ASCII format text file containing various IR Form 1099 information to COMB FED-STATE software which reviews the file data, specifically the two-digit state code, and generates multiple new files intended for each state. COMB FED-STATE concludes its processing by sending each new file to the specific state.

Note: Prior to 2008, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) employed Magnetic Media Filing Processing as a means to capture information from taxpayers and third parties that are filed on magnetic media. Beginning in tax year 2008, the IRS eliminated magnetic media processing and currently employs electronic processing and server storage methods allowing states and third parties to file only once.

Note: Data in COMB FED STATE can be replicated and re-sent to the states as required. There is no need therefore, to retain the data store beyond a one year period following the end of each Processing Year.
