EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
NATIONAL CRITICAL MATERIALS COUNCIL

The mission of the Council is to provide high-level analysis and coordination of minerals and materials policy issues of national importance. Reports are made to the President and Congress. Issues include critical materials, and the health of the domestic minerals industry. Advanced materials research and development are important to the Council, especially as they pertain to research that can affect critical materials dependence. Superconducting materials are a special set of advanced materials for which the Council has been given certain responsibilities.

- 1. National Critical Materials Council (NCMC) Subject Files.
Correspondence, reports, memoranda, minutes, studies and other documentation of the Council. Volume: 5 cubic feet. Dates: 1986-1993 - Abolished in 1993 and functions absorbed into the Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP).

DISPOSITION: PERMANENT.

Retire to the Washington National Records Center upon approval of this schedule. Transfer to NARA in April 2001. Routine and facilitative records, records covered by the General Records Schedules (GRS) and duplicative or nonrecord material may be destroyed during archival processing.
