Enumeration District (ED) Census Maps, 1880–1930

In 1880, the Bureau of the Census began using enumeration districts (EDs). An ED is the area one enumerator (census-taker) could cover during the allotted time. In urban areas, the ED was usually no larger than a few city blocks, and in rural areas the ED could be as large as an entire county. The Bureau did not create its own maps; instead they subdivided pre-prepared maps into small areas. The enumerator counted the number of individuals, recorded the addresses of residents, and gathered any other information required for that census year.

The process of locating an ancestor in the census records can be difficult especially when there is no index or the information was missing from an index. The maps can help you determine the correct enumeration district to search if you have an idea of where your ancestor lived at the time of the census. The census maps are generally annotated with large circled numbers or large handwritten numbers. Please note that enumeration districts changed from census year to census year, so you will have to repeat this process if you would like to locate your ancestor on multiple census schedules.

Finding Aids

The National Archives Building, Washington, DC, holds copies of some enumeration district maps. An inventory of these maps is available in the Microfilm Research Room.

Preliminary Inventory No. 103, Cartographic Records of the Bureau of the Census (National Archives Record Group 29). Lists the census map holdings for 1880 through 1940 of the National Archives and Records Administration. The lists are arranged by state and territory (such as American
