

COMMENT: The DSP is not likely to become a center of either political or cultural activity in West Berlin in the foreseeable future. However, its move into more elegant and centrally-located quarters on the Kurfuerstendamm appears to mark another step in the Soviets' campaign to increase their presence, albeit somewhat indirectly in this case, in West Berlin. The Mission will continue to monitor the DSP in coming months to determine whether the organization's move to a new location heralds a step-up in its end, concomitantly, Soviet activities in West Berlin.
