PART IV: RECORDS RELATING TO SPECIAL SUBJECTS AND TO INDIVIDUALS

Part IV of this inventory describes records relating to special subjects or events that were segregated from the central files of the Department or were maintained by separate offices or missions established to carry out special assignments. The subgroups of records covering these subjects or events are arranged chronologically according to the earliest date of the records for each subject or event. A miscellaneous category completes this section of the inventory.

Records Relating to Impressed Seamen, 1793-1815

From the end of the Revolution until the War of 1812, the U.S. Government was concerned with the impressment of American seamen to serve on British vessels and with the repatriation of men thus impressed. (In some cases seamen were also impressed by French and Spanish naval officers.) An act of May 28, 1796 (1 Stat. 477), authorized the President to appoint two agents at foreign ports to report on the impressment of seamen and to undertake measures for their release. It also provided that masters of U.S. ships should report on impressments to U.S. collectors of customs and to U.S. consular officers abroad and that those representatives of the United States should send to the Secretary of State copies or abstracts of documents concerning impressment. On March 2, 1799, another act (1 Stat. 731), required the Secretary to submit to Congress an annual statement containing an abstract of the reports received on impressments. This requirement lapsed about 1812, but other State Department functions relating to the relief and repatriation of seamen continued throughout and after the War of 1812.

Records related to those described below are in the War of 1812 Papers (entries 937-947), in the series of diplomatic and consular instructions (entries 5 and 59) and despatches (entries 13 and 85), and in the series of circulars (entry 726).

During the War of 1812 an act of Congress (2 Stat. 759) authorized the Secretary of State to issue commissions of letters of marque and reprisal to private armed vessels permitting them to "cruise against the enemies of the United States." Owners of merchant vessels filed applications for the commissions with the State Department of with collectors of customs. Many collectors were allowed to issue to privateers commissions received in blank from the Department of State. The collectors often sent on to the Department the original applications and forwarded periodically abstracts of the commissions they had granted. During the war the Department also issued permits for aliens to leave the United States, and it received reports from U.S. marshals on aliens and prisoners of war in their districts, from collectors of customs and State Department agents on the impressment of seamen, and from the Department's "Secret Agent" on the movements of the British in the Chesapeake Bay area. The Department also

Civil War Papers, 1861-65
From the outbreak of the Civil War until early in 1862, the Secretary of State, acting through U.S. marshals and other Government officials, caused the arrest and imprisonment of nearly a thousand persons suspected of being engaged in treasonable or disloyal activities. These persons were held by military authorities, were not brought to trial, and were released only on the order of the Secretary of State, usually after a special examination made at his direction. On February 14, 1862, the Secretary of War was given the responsibility for political prisoners. Many of these he quickly released; and on February 27, 1862, he established a commission to examine the cases of the prisoners then in custody. This commission, which recommended the release of still other prisoners, submitted its final report in February 1863.
In addition to records relating to the arrest and imprisonment of persons suspected of engaging in treasonable or disloyal activities, the Civil War Papers of the Department of State include intercepted communications, correspondence regarding prisoners of war, newspaper clippings, and miscellaneous war-related items collected or received by the Department.

Civil War Amnesty and Pardon Records, 1863-67

Amnesty oaths were received by the Department of State under the provisions of section 13 of an act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. 592), and of four implementing Presidential proclamations dated December 8, 1863, March 26, 1864, May 29, 1865, and September 7, 1867. (Proclamations of July 4 and December 25, 1868, granted pardon without the necessity of taking an oath.) The proclamations gave to increasingly large groups of individuals in the seceded States the opportunity to take the oaths. Such an oath was one prerequisite to voting for or becoming a delegate to the constitutional conventions later held for the reorganization of those States. The many forms for oaths that were apparently printed throughout the South were not uniform in style, in wording, or even in heading. Some are entitled "Amnesty Oath," others "Oath of Amnesty," "Oath of Allegiance," or "Proclamation Oath." In some cases when Confederate troops surrendered and took the oath, it was coupled with an oath of parole in a document known as "Oath and Parole." Usually each person signed a separate oath, but occasionally the form bears a page of signatures. All these oaths were transmitted to the Department of State, where they were registered and filed. Important Confederate officials and others who were excluded from taking the oath were often granted Presidential pardons; beginning in July 1865, they were obligated to accept in writing certain conditions before the pardons became valid. The petitions for pardon and supporting papers are among the Records of the Adjutant General's Office, 1780's-1917, Record Group 94.

Records of the Thomas Jefferson Statue Commission, 1904-16

The Sundry Civil Appropriations Act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. 491), created the Thomas Jefferson Statue Commission, composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House. The Commission's duties were to select a site for the statue on publicly owned land in the District of Columbia, to procure plans and designs for the statue, and to report its findings to Congress during the next session. The total cost of the statue was not to exceed $100,000. The minute book of the Commission records only two sessions: May 2, 1904, and February 1, 1906. The illness and death of Secretary of State Hay accounts for the long delay between sessions. In May 1906 the Commission arranged for the sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens to prepare designs when time would permit. Saint-Gaudens, however, died before he could undertake the task. No further action was taken concerning a statue of Jefferson until by joint resolution of June 26, 1934 (48 stat. 1243), Congress created the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission.

In January 1920, the mission arrived at Novorossisk on the Black Sea. It withdrew from South Russia on November 15, 1920, when that area fell to the Bolsheviks. During its stay in South Russia it maintained communications with the South Russian government, U.S. consuls, the U.S. High Commissioner in Constantinople, and others in order to collect information for its reports, to protect U.S. interests and citizens, and to aid refugees.

Records of the State Department Representative on the Advisory Committee on the National Archives Building, 1929 and 1930

On July 7, 1930, the President authorized the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the National Archives Building to consist of representatives from the Departments of State, Treasury, War, and Interior and from the Library of Congress and the General Accounting Office. The Secretary of State appointed to this Committee the Historical Advisor of the Department, Tyler Dennett.
The Committee's first meeting was held on July 21, 1930, and its final report was submitted on October 20. The prime purpose of the Committee was to give the architect data on which to base a reasonable estimate of the size and character of an archives building. Several subcommittees were set up to study various phases of the problem. One subcommittee discussed the kinds of records to be retained and another considered the requirements for the building. Surveys of the executive departments' files were made to estimate the quantity and kind of records to be kept. Described below are records created and accumulated by Dennett shortly before the establishment of the Committee and during its existence.

According to the terms of an act of March 24, 1934 (48 Stat. 456), the Philippine Islands were to be granted independence on July 4, 1946, and on that date preferential trade with the United States was to be terminated. The Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs was constituted on April 14, 1937, by agreement between the President of the United States and the President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, to study U.S.- Philippine trade relations and to recommend a program to end existing trade preferences at the earliest possible date consistent with affording the Commonwealth an opportunity to adjust its national economy. The U.S. members of the Committee were appointed by the President upon recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs; the Filipino members were appointed by the President of the Commonwealth.
The Committee first met on April 19, 1937. Some of the recommendations of the Committee were based on public hearings held in Washington on June 16-18, 22, and 23, 1937; in San Francisco on July 21 and 22; and in Manila on September 15-17 and 20-22. The Committee traveled extensively in the Philippines to get firsthand knowledge of the islands' economy, and it received briefs both from witnesses at public hearings and from other interested parties. Toward the close of 1937 the Committee returned to Washington, and on May 20, 1938, it submitted its final report to both Governments. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, acted as Chairman of the Committee until July 13, 1937; he was succeeded by John V. A. MacMurray, who served concurrently as U.S. Ambassador to Turkey.

Records of the Pauley Reparations Missions, 1945-48

On April 27, 1945, the President appointed Edwin W. Pauley to be the U.S. Representative on the Allied Reparations Commission with the title of Ambassador and Personal Representative of the President. The purpose of his mission was to formulate a reparations program and make recommendations to the President. The U.S. delegation left for Moscow on May 20 and returned on August 25. Pauley's report on German reparations was submitted to the President on September 20, 1945.

The President then requested Pauley to make a similar report on Japanese reparations. The U.S. Reparations Mission to Japan visited Japan from November 1, 1945, to January 19, 1946, and submitted its report to the President on April 1, 1946. The report did not include Japanese industries in Soviet-occupied Korea and Manchuria because the U.S.S.R. was reluctant to permit Americans to enter these areas. The U.S.S.R. finally agreed to admit the reparations staff, and the third reparations mission, known officially as the U.S. Reparations Mission to the Far East and Europe, left for Korea and Manchuria on May 4 and returned on July 20, 1946. The report on Japanese assets in Soviet-occupied Korea was submitted to the President on October 25 and the report for Manchuria on November 12.

On March 7, 1947, Pauley was transferred to the Department of State and designated Special Advisor to the Secretary of State on Reparations. A few records of this office are included among the records of the reparations missions.

Records of the U.S. Reparations and Restitution Delegation, Tokyo, 1947-49

The Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (SCAP) had administrative oversight concerning the payment of reparations by Japan to the victorious Allies and the restitution of properties seized during World War II by the Japanese Government.

Each claimant nation was invited by SCAP to designate a Reparations and Restitution Delegation to function under SCAP's executive authority and operational control. Delegations were thus sent from Australia, Canada, China, France, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and the United States. The heads of these delegations met as the Reparations Technical Advisory Committee (RTAC), which served as an advisory body to SCAP in the development of technical and administrative procedures that would ensure an orderly removal of reparation goods from Japan and facilitate settlement of conflicts between claimant nations.

The U.S. Reparations and Restitution Delegation (USRRD) was established by the State Department on April 29, 1947. Rufus B. Smith served as the first chief of the delegation and was succeeded by Charles L. Hodge in July 1947. Homer L. Baker was deputy chief of the delegation. They were assisted by technical aides recruited from large American firms having interests in Japan, including the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, the International Business Machines Corporation, and the International General Electric Corporation. The USRRD's basic function was to make surveys of the Japanese economy in order to ascertain what facilities might be removed from Japan as reparation goods without damage to the country's peacetime economy. Walter E. Hammond was the member of the delegation who was responsible for reparations and restitution investigations regarding American properties seized by the Japanese in Korea. The activities of the delegation were terminated in December 1949.
