Then: From the 1960s to the 1980s, Mario Obledo was one of the most visible Latino politicians in America. One of 14 children of a Mexican American couple in San Antonio, Texas, Obledo helped found the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, which desegregated swimming pools, telephone companies and housing in the Southwest.

His successful battle against at-large districts in San Antonio led to the election of Henry Cisneros, now secretary of housing in the Clinton Administration.

After serving as secretary of California's Health and Welfare Agency from 1975 to 1982, Obledo ran for governor. From 1983 to 1985, he served as president of the 150,000-member League of United Latin American Citizens. From 1986 to 1992, he was chairman of the National Rainbow Coalition, spearheading Jesse Jackson's 1988 presidential run.

Now: Obledo, who turned 64 Wednesday, still operates on a large stage. For the past year, he has led the California Coalition of Hispanic Organizations, which has taken on Proposition 187 and the beating of Mexicans by two Riverside County sheriff's deputies.

"We've registered 5,000 voters in Sacramento over the last six months," he said. "I think that's the answer to our problems."

Since October, Obledo has met with President Clinton at the White House and with Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo in Mexico City.

Obledo said he assured Clinton he would carry California in November, and told Zedillo he was battling the anti-immigrant sentiments wafting through California.

Stop youth smoking drive seen as success

Then: In September state health officials announced a stepped-up campaign to stop youth smoking. It has been financed with funds from Proposition 99 funds, passed in 1988 when voters approved a 25-cent tax on each pack of cigarettes to pay for prevention programs.

The $14 million campaign, touted as the toughest in the nation, features education, sales enforcement and advertising. STAKE (Stop Tobacco Access to Kids Enforcement), requires retailers to post signs at counters warning that tobacco sales to youths under 18 are illegal. Department of Health Services investigators, assisted by teen decoys, spot-check retailers. People are urged to report unlawful sales using a toll-free hotline: 1-800-5-ASK-4-ID.

Civil penalties range from $300 for a first violation to $6,000 for five or more within five years.

* Now: Between Dec. 26 and April 4, investigators made 601 compliance checks statewide. Of the 205 illegal sales found, 16 were in Sacramento County.

The hotline drew 12,194 calls between October and March. The majority involved suspected illegal sales, but people also called to learn more about the program.

So far, the state has fined 125 retailers, and it is still working on the remainder of the cited cases. Seventy-one retailers, including 10 in Sacramento County, have paid a total of $12,500 in fines. Most of the fines, deposited in the state's general fund, were under $250.

"We feel the program has been successful, and we're pleased at the cooperation we have been receiving from the merchants," said Ken August, spokesman for the state DHS.

"There is an increasing level of awareness about the dangers of tobacco for young people, and we're seeing compliance with the law."

Mario G. Obledo

A veteran of the Korean War, Mario Obledo returned home to face another kind of struggle: the struggle of Hispanic Americans to achieve their rightful place as full members of our society. As national president of the League of United Latin American Citizens, a guiding force in the Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project, co-founder of the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund and the National Hispanic Bar Association, and as chairman of the Rainbow Coalition, he has marshaled his abundant talents to benefit those who historically have been denied access to political, economic, and educational opportunities. Uniting the voices of diverse ethnic, racial, and religious groups, Mario Obledo has created a powerful chorus for justice and equality.

This doesn't give
