6. The [redacted] made a rather impassioned speech in which he covered the following points:

- a. His own long experience in the OAS, in Cuba
and in Central America;
- b. His early warnings about Castro--which were disregarded;
- c. The extent to which [redacted] has lived up to its obligations in the [redacted] to which it has [redacted] in efforts [redacted] and to which it has looked toward U. S. leadership;
- d. The failure of the U. S. to take aggressive action against Cuba and the need for taking a hard line, including the use of force in support of military activity by the free Cubans and the other American countries;
- e. His appreciation that the Soviets will not be willing to risk a nuclear war over Cuba;
- f. Condemnation of Mexico for her dealings with Cuba, for failure to abide by her obligations in the OAS, and for permitting the Castroites to operate out of Mexico against other American countries;
- g. The need for action against Mexico;

16/12

- h. The effectiveness of his own actions against guerrillas [redacted] and his determination to "meet violence with violence;"
- i. Recognition of the importance of the information covered in the briefings, and of its exploitation;
- j. Reference to the case of the [redacted]
working for Cuban intelligence and now detained in [redacted]
- k. Acceptance of security restrictions and his decision to hold the information to those present.

7. In replying to the remarks [redacted]

I said that we appreciate the cooperation [redacted] 24
[redacted] and that we shall be most interested in the exploitation of the possibilities in the present case. I added that the matter of using force against Cuba is a policy matter on which I was not competent to comment but that the decisions made by the United States Government are based on careful study of detailed information including information on Soviet intentions and capabilities.

8. At the conclusion of the meeting, [redacted]
asked for a copy of the LCI requirements (which he already had gone over closely) and took the copy with him to study further.
