

20 March 1978

Tony:

I have gone back and forth with Bob Blakey on the fully and truthfully language on our general warrant letter to Stokes. I now believe I have taken out the worst aspect of the reference of the word truthfully by placing the sentence in the last paragraph. In my mind then I can tie the language to those individuals covered by the letter who might think that they are under a secrecy agreement but actually are not and never had a relationship with us. I also then see it as the quid for the third paragraph as making clear that individuals covered by secrecy agreements who seek our guidance in responding on sensitive areas will do just that and not use this discretion to mislead. I am willing to recommend approval on that basis if it is okay with you.
