Transmitted herewith are nine copies of a letterhead memorandum, dated and captioned as above.

MM T-1 is [EMILIO DIAZ] former HAV-35 who arrived in the U. S. 10/3/61, and on whom a separate communication has been submitted recommending reactivation as a PSI. Special Agents of the FBI who interviewed the refugee at Opa-locka were WILLIAM G. FRIEDEMANN and EDWIN L. SWEET.

A considerable volume of data has been supplied in the past concerning availability and distribution of material in Cuba, but not in such complete and detailed form as the attached. Former HAV-35 was an outstanding Cuban Detective with a well trained mind, and is recalled as having produced accurate, detailed and well written reports in the past. This material in the enclosed memorandum is from his own personal experience and observation.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC MATTERS - CUBA

The following information was furnished by MM T-1 on October 16, 1961. MM T-1 is a former Cuban investigator who arrived very recently from Havana, Cuba.
This source has furnished reliable information in the past:

The majority of this report deals with the scarcity and manner of distribution of foodstuffs, as well as other articles of prime necessity in Cuba. For convenience it is subdivided under the headings of the principal food items.

COOKING OILS AND GREASE

The items which comprise the principal ones on the Cuban daily diet are scarce and rationed. Part of the difficulty in securing proper food in Cuba is due not only to the scarcity, but to the lack of organization in its distribution. The distribution system breaks down, and the articles do not arrive in the hands of the consumers with any consistent regularity.

A rationing system has been established for all cooking oils and grease. Rationing cards are issued to the people through the Comites de Defensa de la Revolucion (CDR - Committees of Defense of the Revolution).
