the 1990s, the number of people in the UK with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990). The prevalence of mental health problems in the UK is estimated to be 10% (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the mental health needs of the population. The Mental Health Act 1983 (1990) was a landmark piece of legislation that introduced a new framework for the management of people with mental health problems. The Act was designed to protect the rights of people with mental health problems and to ensure that they receive the best possible care. The Act has been amended several times since it was first passed, and the most recent amendments were made in 2003.

One of the main challenges is the need to improve the quality of care for people with mental health problems. This can be done by ensuring that people receive the best possible care and that their rights are protected.
