obtain re-entry permits for MRR members to travel in Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and Panama, and return to the United States. MM T-2 said that during the month of [X] October, 1964, Borges requested re-entry permits for 58 MRR members, and in November, 1964, 72 more were requested. (X) (u)

MM T-1, on December 10, 1964, advised that different Cuban exile leaders continue to claim that Manuel Artime Buesa and the MRR are making a living off the Cuban revolutionary activities, are engaged in smuggling instead of anti-Communist warfare, and are misappropriating funds designed for commando and infiltration activity against the present Government of Cuba. (u)

MM T-1 continued that it is claimed Artime's men returned from Central America very disenchanted, or with large sums of money earned through illegal activity. (u)

The "Miami Herald," a daily newspaper published in Miami, Florida, on November 27, 1964, contained an article stating that press reports had been received that Cuban exiles in Central America claimed to have a four-ship navy, a small air force, and 200 men trained as commandos. It was estimated that such an operation cost between three and six million dollars a year, although the MRR had carried out only two operations against Cuba during the past year.

In late November, 1964, Mrs. Alicia Trujillo went to the local press in Miami, Florida, and claimed her husband Roberto joined the MRR in February, 1964, was sent to a Central American training camp, and then disappeared. She later received a letter saying Roberto had been killed.

The MRR finally admitted to the press that they enforced their own penal code with a kangaroo court system;
