Gus Alex

Alex was later arrested on September 23, 1959, and fingerprinted by the Police Department of Los Angeles, California, on a traffic misdemeanor.

Alex is considered one of the leaders of the Chicago underworld, having been first introduced to crime while in his teens. Alex was reared in a predominantly Italian area on Chicago's South Side and subsequently attained the stature and reputation of being one of the chief enforcers for the underworld along with his brother, Sam Alex. Alex was a bodyguard and later the confidant of the late Jake "Greasy Thumb" Guzik, long time Chicago underworld leader, until his death in 1956. Alex is reportedly in charge of rackets in the downtown area of Chicago. In years past, he has been the owner and operator of illegal gambling establishments in Chicago. It is noted that at the time he registered for the Selective Service System, he indicated that in 1941 he made $750 from a gambling business.

In 1962, Alex wrote two letters to the Hotel Baur Au Lac in Zurich, Switzerland, requesting room reservations. The first letter was typewritten, dated October 19, 1962, and the second was handwritten and dated December 4, 1962. On both of these letters Alex indicated his return address as c/o Celano, Inc., 620 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. It is noted that this is the address of Celano's Tailors, operated by James Celano, a long time associate of Chicago underworld leaders. Also, this address for years has been a known meeting place and hangout for the top hoodlums of Chicago.

It has been reported by the Swiss Central Police Bureau that Alex's employer, De Luxe Cigarette Service, Inc., certified that he has worked in their publicity department since 1957 and has never given any reason for complaints.

It is noted that Alex claims income from this company, which for years has been reportedly controlled by hoodlums. Alex now is reportedly in charge of this company, having taken
