

Welcome to Los Angeles – Olympic City – 1984

Narrator: You're going to the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, and some of your friends are asking you questions: Aren't those freeways congested? Can you find your way around? Will you find a place to stay? Does the city have much of a cultural life? What about the smog? Will you have to pay exorbitant prices? Won't it be terribly crowded? What about security? How safe is Los Angeles? Good questions.

Flight Attendant: Ladies and gentlemen, at this time we are in our final [Begin narrator speaking in foreground] approach into Los Angeles, the home of the 1984 Summer Olympics. We hope you've enjoyed your flight with us this afternoon and, from all of us at United, [End narrator speaking in foreground] we hope you have a wonderful time at the Games.

Narrator [Speaking over flight attendant]: But relax, there's no need to worry because you're about to experience one of the most varied and vital cities in the United States.

Narrator: Los Angeles is a city of dreams and dream makers. In the minds of millions of people worldwide, the image of America and Americans was created right here in Hollywood. But LA is also a pioneer in high technology, aerospace, and medical research. Its 12 million energetic citizens have created a 150 billion dollar economy. It is a city of fine homes, large universities, palm trees, beautiful beaches, and is home to practically every ethnic and cultural group known to man.

LA is a trendsetter in fads and styles. Everyone, no matter how different, has the right to live and express themselves in LA's warm California sunshine. If it's a new dance, a new [...]
