National Archives at St. Louis NPRC Opens New Exhibit

Through America’s Lens: Focusing on the Greatest Generation 1920-1945

St. Louis, Missouri. The National Archives and Records Administration will present Through America’s Lens: Focusing on the Greatest Generation 1920-1945, a new exhibition featuring some of America’s most memorable photographic images, along with documents from the personnel folders of those who created those images. The exhibition opens on Monday, March 11, 2013 and runs through Friday, September 27, 2013. The exhibition is free and open to the public Monday through Friday each week (except Federal holidays) from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The Through America’s Lens: Focusing on the Greatest Generation (1920-1945) exhibition will contain an extensive selection of historic images taken by photographers who served in the United States military and were employed by the Federal government. “You can see the stress of everyday life and basic survivability in the faces of those that went through this dark chapter in our nation's history. But, you can also see the best and brightest working to make things better to overcome economic ruin and true evil to build a better, stronger and safer country and world,” said National Archives at St. Louis Access Coordinator, Bryan K. McGraw.

Visitors will get a chance to witness the devastation of poverty captured through the lens of Dorothea Lange, whose images of American poverty continue to be noted by today’s scholars. In addition, this exhibition showcases the work of such twentieth-century American photographers as George Ackerman, Lewis Hine, and Arthur Rothstein who were hired by the Federal government to capture the social achievements of President Franklin D. Roosevelt’s “New Deal.” The exhibition also features the work of Native American artist and muralist Gerald Nailor.

Iconic and historic scenes from World War II will be displayed in the work of photographers Barrett Gallagher, Charles F. Jacobs, Robert Sargent, and Edward Steichen. The work of Academy Award-winning cinematographer John Ford will also be featured in the exhibition. These artists captured moments dealing with the horrors of battle as well as the ultimate victory at World War II’s end.
Their iconic photographs will be mixed with documents from their individual civilian and military personnel files. These files contain letters of recommendation, performance appraisals, commendations and other items that illustrate the work and life of the artist as a civilian or military photographer.

Exhibit Public History Lecture Series:

In conjunction with the exhibit, the National Archives at St Louis will sponsor an exhibit lecture series starting on Wednesday, March 20, 2013 at 6:30 p.m. The first lecture will feature St. Louis University’s historian and scholar Dr. Flannery Burke. She will examine the life and career of Dorothea Lange. An iconic image in U.S. history, Dorothea Lange's "Migrant Mother" tells us much about the 1930s, the Great Depression, and American attitudes about poverty. This lecture will place the image in its historical context by introducing listeners to Lange's background as a portrait photographer, the Farm Security Administration's photography program, and the largely untold story of land reform efforts in the 1930s.

Prior to Burke’s lecture; National Archives at St. Louis archivists will discuss Federal documents now available online through such digital partnerships as Ancestry.com and other online research databases.

On Wednesday, April 17, 2013 at 6:30 p.m., Dr. Dan Younger, an art and photography professor at the University of Missouri-St. Louis, will examine how historical photographs impact time and memory during the Great Depression and function as historical markers.

On Wednesday, May 29, 2013 at 6:30 p.m., a panel of local historians will discuss "Poverty In America" as this subject relates to the Greatest Generation and images featured in the larger exhibition. The panel will consist of Dr. Margaret Garb (Washington University) who will discuss the Great Depression; Dr. Adell Patton (University of Missouri at St. Louis) will discuss Post-Depression poverty and Dr. John McManus (Missouri University of Science and Technology) will discuss the impact of famous war-time military images taken by veteran photographers during World War II.

For each lecture, we ask that you RSVP as a courtesy (not required) by e-mail at stlpublic.programs@nara.gov or call 314-801-0847. Place the word lecture in the subject line.
