His story on this is at <http://www.politico.com/story/2015/05/state-department-wont-release-hillary-clintons-emails-until-january-2016-118078.html>

Excerpt:

Hackett also disclosed that personnel from the National Archives have been helping State determine which of the emails Clinton delivered to her former agency are official and which are actually personal. State officials have said at least some of the emails she provided are clearly personal.

"In consultation with the National Archives and Records Administration, the Department also conducted a page-by-page review of the documents to identify, designate, mark, and inventory entirely personal correspondence, i.e., those documents that are not federal records, included within the 55,000 pages," he wrote.

Hi Miriam:

Hope you're well.

A court filing tonight related to Clinton emails says NARA has been involved in designating some records as private and some as official.

Can you confirm and perhaps add details of who from NARA and what their role is?

Thanks
