1	AIR FORCE RECORDS (as applicable) FPMR 101-11.507 requires obtaining NARS authority to microfilm an agency's nonpermanent records in order to dispose of the original records. USAF has a well-established Microform Management Program which is controlled by this office. Cost-effectiveness is a major factor in granting approval. Request authority to grant approval for destruction of source documents upon conversion to an acceptable microform when records concerned have been appraised and approved for disposal as documented in Air Force Manual 12-50. The attached list shows Air Force Microform Systems in existence as of 1 Jan 1973. A new listing as of 1 July 1973 is in preparation. Such listings are prepared semi-annually and can be furnished if desired with annotations to indicate those approved since previous list. Alternatively, a copy of the portion of our semi-annual history which summarizes microform activity during a six-month period could be provided. If desired, the applicable disposition instruction from AFM 12-50 could be added to either.	NN170-33 and subsequent

	Until now, compliance with FPMR 11.5 has been achieved for new systems by this office. A revision to the regulation governing microform system management is in preparation. It will require review of existing systems so that those involving records with indefinite retention periods can be submitted for authorization to dispose of the source documents presently stored in Federal Records Centers. Should any include records determined to be permanent provision will be made to assure archival microfilm standards have been met before source documents are destroyed. It will also implement FPMR requirements for microfilm production and storage for application Air Force-wide as opposed to present system of furnishing instructions for each system. New microform system proposals covering records not previously appraised will be submitted in accordance with applicable FPMR instructions.

USAF MICROFORM SYSTEMS

(as of 1 Jan 1973)

There are 286 approved Microform Systems within the Air Force, documented in accordance with AFR 12-40. Of these, 148 are "in-house" (as opposed to leased) systems. They are listed below, under Part I of this index, grouped by organizational component. A number of the in-house systems depend on contract services for microfilming, processing, etc. An increasing number obtain service from Microform Service Centers established under the provisions of AFR 12-42. Several are not yet operational because of funding or other problems. "B" in the system number indicates a procedural rather than an archival application.

The remaining 138 approved Microform Systems consist of leased reference files. They are located at 94 Air Force installations. Fifty-four of these use files produced by the Showcase Corporation to support Civil Engineering functions. Eighty-two use various VSMF files produced by Information Handling Services. Several of these are 8mm (versus 16mm) satellite files. Forty-five of the VSMF systems support Civil Engineering and 27 other engineering or related functions. Eight are used in Engineering Data Service Centers while two support procurement/supply activities. Two Civil Engineering systems use a combination of Showcase and VSMF files. Identification of the individual systems appears in Part II of this index. The system number appears in parentheses after each. All system numbers include the system manager as a prefix; e.g., AFAFC 1B-54; AAC 1-1C-71.
