	1. SECONDARY USE SAMPLING RECORDS
	Completed questionnaires, control cards, and records that are selected for secondary use new sampling frames, conducting statistical	in planning research, records that are selected for secondary use in planning new sampling frames, conducting statistical research, or making data/sample comparisions with another sample survey or census. When so selected, these documents become incorporated in this series and shed their previous retention periods.

Destroy when 10 years or sooner if no longer needed, but in no case earlier than the normal scheduled retention period.

This entry covers records that have been selected for a secondary use that requires retention of the records beyond the normal retention period. Since these records constitute a small proportion of the series in which the records belong, the redesignation of secondary use records as a new series will preclude either the necessity of requesting from the National Archives an extension for each individual group of records or the necessity of extending the retention periods for whole series of records and thus adding to unnecessary storage costs.
