The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) maintains over linear feet of hard copy print-outs from the Sensitive Sour Reporting Program (SSRP) For many years, the FBI downloaded information from the Central Intelligence Agency's SSRP electronic system and created paper reference files to store the outputs However, in 2009, the FBI _	implemented a new business process whereby employees query
the SSRP and only print those reports related to a matter in which the FBI has an investigative or intelligence interest.
Employees rarely refer to the collection of pre-2009 printed reports
The FBI may use portions of the SSRP documents to create new FBI document, however, the original SSRP document not placed in file nor is it uploaded into the Automated Ca Support system
