Air/Water Quality Charts

This data includes SO₂, NO₂, and ozone analog strip chart records and associated calibration records. Prior to 1988, these included AISI charts, windspeed charts, wind direction charts, air temperature charts, hygro-thermograph charts, and dewpoint charts (by rolls, by plant name, by monitor type, station no. or site no.)

Until August 1988, these data were digitally recorded, averaged, printed on a teletype, and punched on a paper tape with mini-computer system. Data was transferred from the paper tape to a mainframe file using a paper tape reader. The paper tape served as the primary input medium to the Air/Water Quality Processing programs maintained by Data Services Branch (now Engineering Services) which inventoried and printed data. Preliminary data was digitally-recorded data, which when judged to be valid, based upon calibration and maintenance records and analog chart review, were used by TVA in assessment (licensing) and compliance activities. The data in the mainframe file was included in a magnetic-tape based data base.

In August 1988, the mini-computer based data logging systems were replaced with microcomputer based data loggers. The mainframe data base system was replaced with a data base system that operates on a personal computer.

Analog chart recordings from windspeed and wind direction instruments were discontinued in 1988 at sites operated in support of TVA's fossil fueled plants. Air temperature charts, dewpoint charts, hygro-thermograph charts, and coefficients of haze charts were discontinued earlier.

After all the data for a year was "initially validated", the data were rolled off of the rotating master and onto a magnetic permanent storage master tape. The year-end master tape is then backed up onto another magnetic tape which is stored in an environmentally controlled vault at another site. After backing up the year-end tape, the data from this tape was microfiched in "initially validated" printout format and distributed to other organizations. The records were microfilmed in accordance with FPMR 1091-11.4 and FPMR 101-11.5.
