INTRODUCTION

The Committee on Public Information was organized on April 13, 1917, under Executive Order No. 2594, with George Creel as chairman.

The Committee performed three great services during World War I. It acted as an agency for releasing news of the Government; it issued educational information to sustain morale in the United States and in Allied and neutral countries; and it administered the voluntary censorship that served as a substitute for the defeated censorship law.

As soon as the Armistice was signed, cessation of the domestic activities of the Committee began. The propaganda work of its offices in foreign countries, however, continued until June 30, 1919, when the Committee ceased to function.

The records described in this inventory, consisting of 92 cubic feet, are designated as Record Group 63, Records of the Committee on Public Information. They have been described before in a classification scheme prepared by F. Hardee Allen, of the National Archives staff, in 1939. The original classification number under that scheme appears after the title of each entry in the inventory.

Personnel and payroll records of the Committee are in the Federal Records Center, St. Louis, Mo. Some related records, consisting of three volumes of George Creel's correspondence with Woodrow Wilson, chiefly concerned with Committee on Public Information matters, are in the Library of Congress, where they are maintained as a supplement to the President Wilson collection.
